Letter from Archbishop Brady

You may recall my encouragement to the priests of the diocese in Bundoran last year, that all parishes should have a parish pastoral council. This important area of pastoral work was highlighted by the people of the diocese who made known their desire to see a parish pastoral council in every parish during the consultation process that took place in the diocese in Lent 2005. I consider this a priority for the continuing renewal of the diocese.

Some twenty parishes already have, or are in the process of forming, a parish pastoral council. I commend the work of the priests and people involved for bringing this about. It is no small task and takes time, effort and energy to enable the people of the parish take up roles that are theirs by virtue of their baptism.

This is an important development for the diocese and I would ask that you take this opportunity to further the ideal of parish pastoral council in your parish. Most Reverend Seán Brady, Archbishop of Armagh.

What does a Parish Pastoral Council do?

A parish pastoral council

- Seeks to identify the needs of the community
- Works to meet those needs
- Uses the many gifts of the people of the parish
- Listens to all the members of the community
- Encourages all to live out their baptism as disciples of Jesus
- Carries out the ministry of Jesus in today's world.
